These latter identities point to the existence, in the case of certain determinants of odd order, of a. development analogous to that found above for our special determinant of the sixth order. (0, 10, ., mm being written for the ten products of complementary minors. These products are connected by means of a theorem analogous to Sylvester s theorem above quoted. For the particular case at present needed the new theorem is readily established in the manner Professor Oayley has established the other. It is evident that and therefore, from expressing the first and third of these determinants in terms of products of complementary minors, (cf. Cayley, Quart. Journ. of Math. xv. p. 56). What we have...
