I have a collection of the commonest street ditties, which I picked off the wall of a church in Naples, where they hung in fifties--purchased for an English shilling or thereabouts; and one and all of these are in the Barcarole or Brindisi measure: to make an arbitrary use of familiar words. Here, however, is one--which is somewhat odd, from an episodical phase of three bars which disturbs the symmetry of the rhythm. I have offered this specimen because of its irregularity; observing nevertheless, that though the same is duly printed, the odd bar...
