Prepared for the Senate and House Committees on Civil Service. INTRODUCTION. The civil-service law has now been in operation over a quarter of a century. Passed by a Republican Congress, it was sternly upheld by a Democratic President. The best men of both parties have been its disinterested supporters. Its beneficent effects have been felt throughout the public service and few will be found to dispute them. NEED OF PLAN FOR RETIRING SUPERANNUATED CIVIL EMPLOYEES. There is one problem of the service, however, that the law has not solved, and that is the problem of superannuation. Without provision for retirement of the aged officeholder a law which in practical operation insures him a permanent tenure of office works an injustice to the Government, since it permits the retention...
