Not illustrated. 1905 Excerpt: .Piney Woods, and always considered very healthy in the last few years, since the timber is being rapidly cut all over the country and vast quantities left on the ground to decay, malaria is much more prevalent and seems to be on the increase. As I said before, we have it with us always; that is, in this section. This, I think, can be attributed to the fact that the winters here are so mild we never have sufficient cold weather to kill any disease germs and also to the habits and mode of living among the natives. As a rule the houses are badly constructed and poorly ventilated; they use water from shallow wells, with the impurities found in all surface water. The practitioner in a malarial section is seldom called to a case of simple chills, as most of the people claim they can cure chills as good as a doctor, consequently, when he is called, he either finds chronic conditions or serious complications to contend with. Were I asked what these usual complications are, I would hardly know what to say, as one is liable to meet with most anything. I believe, however, typhoid, pneumonia and rheumatism, in the order named, are most frequent, not all in the same case, but one can very confidently expect to find one of the three in any complicated case of malaria. As regards the treatment of malarial infection, my experience is there can be no set rule....
